

GOD KNOWS

God knows everything...and nothing. He is either supreme creator of the Universe or a figment of our imagination. If the latter, he is little more than oath or expletive – an almost meaningless three letter word... “God have mercy!” I cry and realise I am only echoing words inside my head, although the mercy of God seems sometimes to flow through my body like wine.

Where does imagination end and spirituality begin? We cannot see God except in every atom of his creation which includes the thoughts of wiser men than we. An atheistic footballer would still say the spirit of his team was colossal and you cannot see that either. Invisible things like sound waves and radio waves have real substance so why not a Spirit World too?

There are thousands of mediums and they cannot all be charlatans. Evidence of ghosts abounds. You can assess the Spirit of a man without even looking at him. Such strong evidence for Spirit is obvious even to the atheist.

And what of the Spirit of God himself? We are taught that his is a loving Spirit. God is love. And we need look no further than the gospels to find his only begotten son. Jesus is God incarnate, a perfect pattern for the best behaviour.

Atheists can only live behind a brick wall, blotting out the significance of all experience. It is much easier and more salutary to believe. With a robust faith you are far more able to flourish and cope with life.

You have only got to turn the corner from blank nothing and you are presented with all the riches of the Universe. The God I worship, knows and provides everything. Confusion and chaos dog many of our thoughts but I have discovered that to make sense of the World is to make Christian sense.

No man has seen God at any time? This simply is not true. What about the countless cathedrals and churches, icons and portraits poetry and statues and oratories which lead us toward God? You cannot sweep all glory aside without denying glory exists, which is plain nonsense. We should take great comfort in the things of the Spirit and try to raise our own spirits to a higher level all the time. Every atom of the Universe is proof positive that the Creator exists. God not only knows everything but loves us as his own children.
