

Magna on Facebook©

Many people at Holy Cross know that I am a bit of a Face Book addict. I first joined Facebook in December 2007 after my Aunt Ethel's funeral. At the funeral I caught up with my cousins and their children and even their grandchildren. They were curious about the Aboe branch of the family and I had the most information having been very close to our grandmother, Christeen Aboe. Gradually I became 'friends' with most of my family through Face Book. It allows us to keep up with each others' news.

In 2008 I decided to set up a Facebook group at work for alumni and current students of the MSc Occupational/Organisational/Business Psychology courses at the University of Hertfordshire. This has proved a great way of keeping touch with past students and the Facebook group received a commendation from the British Psychological Society's accreditation team when they visited in March 2009. (It also gives me a legitimate excuse for looking at Face Book during working hours!).

I'm now proposing to set up a Magna Facebook group. Anyone who has any connection with Holy Cross would be eligible to join. It would provide a means of keeping in touch with any Holy Crossers moving away from Greenford (such as Ray Allen, who happens to be one of my Facebook 'friends') and also it could be used as an additional means for advertising events at Holy Cross.

Or leave a note in the Magna pigeon-hole, or contact me in Church to let me know what you think.

Is it finally time for Magna and Holy Cross to enter the world of social networking?
